Seizing the Power of Cannabis

What is Full Spectrum Dosing?

Halo Infusions utilizes a Full Spectrum Multi-Cannabinoid dosing model in all of our products. This comprehensive approach means that we harness the potential benefits of multiple major and minor cannabinoids, as well as terpenes, flavonoids, and other beneficial phytonutrients naturally found in the cannabis plant.

Our Full Spectrum Process

Our Full Spectrum process starts with whole plant cannabis containing a diverse range of cannabinoids, terpenes, flavonoids and other compounds. We then use a specialized ethanol extraction method to capture this full spectrum of components from the plant material. The ethanol solvent effectively breaks down the trichomes where these compounds are concentrated, while preserving their diversity and minimizing degradation.

Minimally processed cannabis extract includes the characteristic lipids and fats present in cannabis. Rather than extracting these compounds during the refinement, Halo Infusions products retain the lipids and fats which surround the cannabinoids and provide more effective ingestion in the digestive tract.

The resulting extract is then precisely infused into our products, so they contain a spectrum of active cannabinoids, including THC, CBD, CBG, CBC, THCV, CBDV, and others. This Full Spectrum approach stands in contrast to products made from isolated CBD, THC distillate, or other refined extracts, which lack the diversity of beneficial compounds provided by the whole plant.

Halo Infusions' infused topical products go a step further in capturing even more of the cannabis plant's native compounds. Our proprietary process uses raw cannabis flower material, extracting cannabinoid, terpenes, and many other compounds directly into base oils. Employing a unique, optimized partial decarboxylation approach, finished products employing this approach express a very broad spectrum of both cannabinoids and their acidic precursors.

The Entourage Effect

By retaining the diversity of the whole plant, Halo Infusions' Full Spectrum products deliver more consistent, reliable effects for both patients and recreational users alike. The multitude of compounds contributes to consistent experiences, as opposed to the variability that may occur when using an isolated cannabinoid like CBD alone. Consumers can always depend on stable, predictable relief when using our Full Spectrum products.

Benefits of a Full Spectrum Multi-Cannabinoid Model

- The Entourage Effect
- Consistent, Reliable Effects
- Whole Plant Medicine
- Improved Bioavailability
- Greater Efficacy
- Unique Product Experiences

Whole Plant Medicine

Our dedication to Whole Plant Medicine means harnessing the full power of nature, not just isolated compounds. Cannabis evolved its medley of components to provide environmental resilience and therapeutic benefits. By preserving this evolutionary balance, our Full Spectrum products mirror nature's intricate design. Providing bioavailable access to cannabis' holistic richness is not simply limited selection of components.

The Full Spectrum Difference

Research indicates that Full Spectrum extracts can offer greater efficacy compared to isolated compounds or cannabis oils that have been stripped of components like terpenes. The harmony of the Entourage Effect can enhance absorption and maximize therapeutic impact. Our Full Spectrum model aims to provide the full benefit potential of the cannabis plant.

Finally, the diversity of compounds contributes to each Halo Infusions product having a unique experience. While isolated CBD will produce familiar effects, our array of cannabinoids, terpenes, and other components offers more nuanced benefits. Customers can find the specific product experience that suits their needs.

Experience the Synergy of Nature

The cannabis plant contains over 400 chemical compounds that contribute to its therapeutic potential and sensory experience. It's the harmonious interaction between these compounds that creates what experts call the "Entourage Effect," producing a therapeutic impact greater than the sum of its parts.

By mimicking nature through Full Spectrum products, Halo Infusions provides users with the most comprehensive and stable benefits cannabis has to offer. Consumers obtain the synergistic advantages of multiple cannabinoids, the balance of terpenes, and the added activity of flavonoids and other components. This translates to maximized therapeutic impact with the diversity required for consistent, natural relief.

Discover the Full Spectrum difference for yourself and experience cannabis' benefits as nature intended.
